"You can only apply for one subject on UCAS" Mythbusting

False! When applying for university, you can apply for up to 5 different courses at 5 different universities. This means that if you are still trying to decide between two subjects, you can apply for both of them through UCAS. For example, if you have an interest in Sociology and Criminology, you could apply to study Sociology at Cardiff and Criminology at Birmingham, or you could apply for a joint honour's degree, where half your modules will be Sociology based, and half Criminology based.

Beware though, you can only submit one personal statement meaning that statement needs to be relevant to all the courses and universities. Do not put in your personal statement, "I am applying to this university because I want to be close to the sea", unless all the universities you are applying for are near the sea. Do not say, "my favourite subject is biology" if you are also applying for a physics course at a university. Ensure your personal statement reflects all your choices, both of university and course.
